

Manuscript reference: Ds 177

This folio with red margins, the last of the manuscript, is drawn on its left side with the image of an unidentified three-arched furniture or building. Each of its three arches is trefoiled and supported by a pair of pilasters or posts. The three arches support in turn a two-tiered superstructure that may be identified as a ceiling from which stick out the ends of five beams, and as a roof with a parapet. Its relation with the text is unclear.
